The ball is swung around the head, slowly at first, the arms are kept straight, and the hammer swung as near the ground as possible. When swinging rapidly and while high in the air over the left shoulder, it is turned loose. After this swing has been acquired, a turn can be practiced. (See Fig. 3 Plate IV.) The turn is to give the ball greater velocity. The hammer is loosened in the same position as before. As in the case of the shot, care must be taken that no part of the body strikes the ground outside the circle.
